ABSTRACT

The book, Turbar Tarabulus (The Road to Tripoli), is a written play which depicts how the Trans Saharan trade between Kano city in Hausaland (Bilad as Sudan) in the present-day Nigeria and Tripoli in Libya, in Arab North Africa (Magreb), has been an avenue for merchants who engaged in a journey for commercial purposes, between 14th and 19th centuries. The journey was undertaken across the Sahara desert on camel or donkey as well as on foot to their destinations. Some researchers tend to ignore the real happenings during the journey, especially the cultural aspects associated with the merchantile activities (e.g. fatauci) and dwell much on the journey; the slave trade and its commercial benefits and its illegality. An analytical, textual and intrinsic study of the play was made to ascertain the types of real activities that were carried out enroute to and from the two cities (Kano and Tripoli) as per what is obtained in the play. The researchers therefore adopted the objectives of 'realism' as the modern literary theory that they applied on the play and as a result, their findings showed that during the journey, some real cultural activities like commercial, religious, social, ethnic, medicinal as well as magical (for protection) etc, were carried out in those days.

الملخص

هذه المقالة عبارة عن محاولة لدراسة مسرحية Turbar Tarabulus لأحمد كنو دراسة نقدية واقعية، وذلك لإلقاء ضوء كاشف على تلك العلاقات التجارية القديمة بين طرابلس ومدينة كنو، وما تميّز به من عادات وتقاليد، وقد لاحظ الباحث أن معظم الدارسين لم يعبروا هذا الجانب اهتماماً، وكل اهتمامهم منصب نحو تاريخ الرحلات وما فيها من تجارة العبيد والجواري، وتحديثها، وسلك الباحث منهج النقد الواقعى في تحليل نصوص الكتاب وتقييمها. وأخيراً توصل إلى أن تلك الرحلات مشوّبة بظواهر واقعية أثرت في حياة أولئك التجار، وفي الفيالق التي اختلطوا بها، وذلك في الجوانب عدة: كالتجارة وطبع الأعشاب والحياة الاجتماعية والدينية والثقافية .
